Navy last to mandate DDS

Direct Deposit, the pay delivery system that electronically sends your pay to the bank or credit union of choice, will soon shed its label as an optional pay method and become mandatory.

The Navy will become the last of the armed services to opt for all Direct Deposit, or DDS, five years behind the Marine Corps.

Beginning July 15, anyone entering the Navy, reenlisting, extending service, receiving a regular or reserve officer appointment and reservists must enroll in DDS.

The dictate follows a June instruction signed by the Secretary of the Navy.

All reenlistees and officers accepting a regular appointment will be required to sign administrative remarks (a page 13 entry), promising to enroll in DDS.

All servicemembers not falling into one of the categories mentioned above can still receive their pay by government check - until they enter one of those categories.

"The bottom line is that the Navy wants this to be the way to go," said Petty Officer 1st Class Rich Munson, leading petty officer of the disbursing office at the personnel support detachment.

Munson said the required page 13s would soon become a familiar part of the reenlistment paperwork package.

Family Service Center seeks Ombudsman-officer volunteers

Are you interested in becoming a volunteer Command Ombudsman for the Naval Postgraduate School? If so, submit your resume to Family Service Center by August 9.

All spouses of military officers assigned to Naval Postgraduate School are eligible.

The functions of an Ombudsman include: liaison between NPS officer families and the command; regular communication with the families; information, outreach, and referral for families; advocacy programs; and other activities.

For more information contact officer command ombudsman: Sara Smith, 372-3920 or Kathryn Yeast, 649-8014.

New student, Lt. Patrick Leary, completes check-in forms at the personnel support table as part of the one-stop check-in process for newly arriving Naval Postgraduate students.

Professor honored

Distinguished Professor Emeritus Allen Fuhs, past chairman of both the mechanical engineering and aeronautics departments and the space systems academic group, and a past president of the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics received another honor in June. Fuhs was the recipient of the University of New Mexico's (UNM) Erna S. Fergusson Award for distinguished service to his alma mater. He is a 1951 alumnus of UNM.

Course expanded

As a result of the expanded International Military Education and Training (IMET) initiative, the Defense Resources Management Education Center (DRMEC) is on the road with mobile international defense management courses in Honduras (June and November 91) and Argentina (September 91). Preliminary plans for 1992 include courses in Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Botswana. Each course will focus on improving the effectiveness of resources management in these emerging democracies.

An all-DDS Navy will greatly streamline the typical disbursing office, Munson said, relieving the time-consuming tasks of check production, tracking individual checks, mailing and following up.

"We cut checks for all Navy on the Monterey Peninsula and it's very time consuming," Munson said. "This will free us up to give more attention to ensuring records are up-to-date and proper."
