A knock on the door of Quarters H at NPS brings not only a warm greeting from Mrs. J. E. McQuary, but also from the McQuarys' white standard poodle, Jolie.

A gracious lady with the soft tones of Virginia in her voice, Sarah McQuary demonstrates the capacity to make even the newest Navy wife feel as "at home" in the military service as she is herself. Using this talent in many ways, Mrs. McQuary has recently hosted a coffee for new brides at the Postgraduate School and is serving as an advisor to OSWC, which allows her to share ideas gained from an extensive military career.

Whether in Japan or Hawaii, El Centro, California, or Brooklyn, New York, she has become involved with the people around her, both Navy and civilian, feeling that this is one of the greatest opportunities provided by Navy life. As she discusses this feeling, one is captivated by the contagious type of love and appreciation she has for the experiences gained from traveling among and relating to a vast variety of people.

Mrs. McQuarry's service to others includes work with Navy Relief, the Red Cross, and the League of Women Voters, for example, while on an informal level the friendly hand she extends to other wives is an invaluable contribution. Urging students' wives to enjoy the special opportunities available on the Peninsula, she expressed the fact that just as "academic duty" is an unusual assignment for husbands, so, too is a NPS tour a unique experience for wives. It is the sensitive woman, furthermore, who will realize the enviable privileges offered by an assignment to Monterey.

Supplementing her many "serious" activities with a recreational side, Mrs. McQuarry likes bridge, is an avid reader, and shares her husband's interest in golf, enjoying play at the Navy Golf Course and the Monterey Peninsula Country Club.

Reluctantly leaving the McQuarys' quarters for the rainy afternoon I had left outside, and remembering the cordial welcome I had experienced, I realized again what a gracious asset the Navy has in Sarah McQuary.
